Conference presenters have the opportunity to submit their work for publication in the refereed, internationally recognized journal Double Dialogues or its sister publication dedicated to the creative arts process, In/Stead. For submission guidelines, presenters are encouraged to familiarize themselves with the individual journals' guidelines (for more details, see www.doubledialogues.com/notes-contributors.html).

Double Dialogues

Double Dialogues journal and conferences are dedicated to creative arts theory, practice, philosophy, and their intersections. The dialogues are those that occur, in cross-disciplinary modes, between the art-work (whether theatrical, visual, musical or verbal) and the reflection upon that art. Double Dialogue conferences generally include the art-work, as well as the related discourse. In times when art practice has become part of the academy and there has arisen the necessity for exegetical discussion about the art, the content of these conferences and the international debate they have brought to fruition has led the way in providing a forum for a multiplicity of discourse concerning the arts and their value in the contemporary world.

Double Dialogues Conferences have been in existence since 1996. Co-ordinated by A/Prof. Ann McCulloch (Deakin University, Australia; Dr. Ron Goodrich (Deakin University, Australia); Paul Monaghan (University of Melbourne, Australia) and Dr. Anthony Hood (Web Producer, Australian Cinema for the Moving Image, Melbourne, Australia), conferences have occurred in Australia, Fiji, and New Zealand. Recently, Double Dialogues have made links with the Otherness Research Centre at Aarhus University (Denmark), the Oceanic Centre (Fiji), and University of Limerick (Ireland). See Issue 10 for Double Dialogues 'Otherness' publication.

See www.doubledialogues.com to access resultant Double Dialogues publications and conference abstracts.

The Hunger Artist: Food and the Arts

Underpinning arts is the complex dialectic of consumption and consummation of ideas, concepts, and forms. Since Plato, the artistic process has been associated with excess, but also with reining in of appetites. Franz Kafka's short story, "The Hunger Artist" perhaps best delineates the author's hunger for what Antonin Artaud called "an absolute space," a soulful space beyond one's physical self, wherein the artist like the wolf in Arthur Rimbaud's poem, "Hunger", "devours himself." The theme underpinning this year's conference is the relationship between desire and arts, appetite and hunger, space and the act of artistic creation. Of specific interest is the fact of food as a subject matter included in novels, myths, art-works, plays, poems, opera, dance performance, film etc. To what extent is this inclusion working on other metaphorical levels as much as literal ones? Performances and scholarly papers exploring how food and consumption figure in the arts (poetry, fiction, graphic novel, theatre, dance, opera, music, film, visual, and digital arts etc.) and across disciplinary boundaries are particularly welcome.

Further themes might be:

1. The use of food as motif in works of art
2. Food as representation of the sacred/sublime
3. Food as enemy (guilt, punishment, torment)
4. Sources of food and exploitation (colonialism & post-colonialism)
5. Commodification of food (communism versus capitalism)
6. Food as cultural heritage
7. Production of food and environmental ethics
8. Greed and food as fetish (globalization & multiculturalism)
9. Disciplinary crossings as food
10. Food and affect
11. Vivisection, sacrifice, transubstantiation: Food and ritual
12. Obesity and starvation: Two sides of the same coin?

This list consists of mere suggestions and we welcome all variations of the theme.
